Posing in his Y-fronts for a website called Gaydar, the MP who helped scrap ban on gay sex in public

By Simon Walters, Louise Pritchard and Jason Lee

It is a Labour MP Chris Bryant who has courted controversy in the Conservative heartlands of the South Wales valleys. Whether there would be any sex from Bryant, 45, is a matter of a pair of pants. Bryant is the former Chairman of England's gay and lesbian centre in London. He is a vocal supporter of gay rights and has appeared in the gay press in his Y-fronts.

He has also been the subject of a series of letters and e-mails from Bryant's constituents, many of whom are angry that he has posed in his Y-fronts for a website called Gaydar. Bryant has said he will not be taking any action against those who have written to him.
